Applicants with dual status

o Fifteenth transmission - ICC-01/05-01/08-1884-Conf-Exp-Anxs

Applicant [REDACTED]

Claim to victim status

The applicant alleges that after she had saved a woman and two girls, the population of the [REDACTED] area of [REDACTED] called her to help with the pillaged goods. She further states that upon her return, she found that her house had been pillaged by the Banyamulengués. As a result of the alleged events, the applicant claims to have suffered psychological and material harm.²

Analysis and conclusions

The Chamber notes that the applicant fails to provide her name on the first page of the application form. However, as her name is indicated under question 22 and as the remainder of the identifying information provided is consistent with the information appearing on her identity card, the Chamber is satisfied that the documents provided sufficiently demonstrate the identity of the applicant.

The Chamber further notes that the applicant does not indicate the precise date of the alleged events. However, taking into account the intrinsic coherence of the application in other respects, notably the reference to the occupation of Bangui by the Banyamulengués, and given that during her oral testimony³ as a witness before the Court, the applicant referred to the period covered by the temporal scope of the present case, the Chamber is of the view that the failure to provide a precise date in her application form should not serve to exclude the applicant.

Under these circumstances, the Chamber considers that, overall, the applicant has provided sufficient evidence to establish prima facie that she is a victim under Rule 85(a) on the basis that she suffered personal harm as a result of crimes confirmed against the accused, namely the pillage of her belongings by the Banyamulengués of Jean-Pierre Bemba in [REDACTED] on an unspecified date between 26 October 2002 and 15 March 2003.
